The Superintendent declines to take any part in the transaction as the man is condemned to death. It is not known where the property is situated and whether the prisoner has any claimants. Section 62 of the Indian Penal Code lays down that whenever any person is convicted of an offence punishable with death, the Court may adjudge that all his property, movable and immovable shall be forfeited to Government. It is also not known whether any such adjudication has been made by the Court concerned in this case.
